

Test 3 - Part 3 Discussion

Astari continues to discuss wildlife and endangered animals.

TRANSCRIPT

Interviewer: What's the greatest threat to wildlife?

Astari: I think the greatest threat to wildlife is humans because their activities sometimes endanger their population and habitats.

Interviewer: Is it worth preserving wildlife?

Astari: Yes, it is because we need the balance between wildlife, nature and human being; we cannot live without each other.

Interviewer: Are the large animals the most important?

Astari: Not always. Animals big or small are all important.

Interviewer: Will wildlife survive into the next century?

Astari: I think they can, with the help of humans of course. We need to balance things that what we take from the nature we have to get back for example if we cut down trees then we need to plant another one.

Interviewer: Can zoos help save wildlife?

Astari: Yes a zoo can help save wildlife. It can raise awareness for people about wildlife and they can help breed the threatened animals.

Interviewer: Can wildlife adapt to cities?

Astari: No, I don't think wildlife can adapt to the cities. They have their own space, their own environment and it's not fair to them or even to humans if they live in the city. It's not their habitats.
